Life with Mr Sowerberry

For a week Oliver stayed alone in the cold dark cellar, and it was the worst week of his life so far. Every morning, Mr Bumble unlocked the door, took Oliver into the room where the boys were eating and beat him while the boys watched. Then he locked Oliver in the room again. Poor Oliver cried all day and, at night, he couldn't sleep because he was cold, unhappy ... and hungry.

One morning, at the end of that week, Mr Bumble saw Mr Sowerberry, the coffin-maker, outside the workhouse. Mr Sowerberry was a tall thin man who always wore black clothes because of his job. He often came to the workhouse because so many poor people died there and so he knew Mr Bumble well. The two men began to chat, and then Mr Bumble pointed to the notice on the workhouse door.

"Mr Sowerberry, do you know anyone who wants a boy—and five pounds?"

Mr Sowerberry thought for a few moments.

"I think I'll take him, Mr Bumble. I need a boy to work in my shop."

They went inside to make the arrangements.

That evening, Mr Bumble unlocked the cellar door and told Oliver the news. Oliver said nothing. He just pulled the cap down over his eyes to hide his tears and followed Mr Bumble through the streets to the coffin-maker's shop.

Mr Sowerberry was waiting for them. There was only the light from one small candle so the room was dark and gloomy. A finished coffin lay on a table in the middle of the room and pieces of wood stood against the walls. Mr Sowerberry smiled at Oliver and then called his wife.

“Mrs Sowerberry, will you come here for a moment, my dear?”

Mrs Sowerberry was a small thin woman with an angry face. Oliver thought she looked like a fox. She looked at him and Oliver bowed politely.

“Hmm ... he’s very small,” she said, at last.

“Yes, he is small,” agreed Mr Bumble, “but he’ll grow, ma’am.”
“Oh yes, he’ll grow all right ... on our food and drink! Get downstairs, you little bag of bones!”

She pushed Oliver down some stairs into a dark little kitchen where a servant girl was working.

“Charlotte, give this boy those bits of meat the dog didn’t eat.”

For the first time in his life, Oliver tasted meat. He ate the dog’s food hungrily, and then Mrs Sowerberry said, “Your bed’s under the shop counter. There’s nowhere else, so enjoy sleeping in there—with the coffins!”

She laughed and left Oliver alone. He was very frightened and hardly slept all night.

Early in the morning, Oliver heard someone kicking the door and shouting, “Open the door!”

Oliver opened the door and a big boy walked into the shop.

“I am Mister Noah Claypole, and you must do what I tell you,” said the boy. “Now take the shutters down and hurry up!”

He kicked Oliver as he walked past.
