Georgia On My Mind

Our travel editor, Owen Creedy, heads to Georgia for two days with old friends.

I had met Giorgi and Irina at university and, being on the same course, we became great friends. They are a brother and sister from Georgia and they had always been inviting me to stay with them in the capital city Tbilisi. Last month, I decided that it was time to finally take a short trip there.

I had been reading a guide book on the five-hour flight to Tbilisi, so when the plane landed I had learnt a bit about Georgia. It's a small country on the edge of Europe with around five million inhabitants. The guide book added that it was a mix of the West and the East, as well as the traditional and the modern.

I had arrived late at night, so I didn't get my first view of the city until the next morning. The guide book had been right. With narrow streets, colourful houses and small shops, the Old Town felt like an old-fashioned village. But then I saw the Peace Bridge – an amazing modern construction of glass and steel. Giorgi and Irina also took me to Narikala Fortress, a 4th-century castle with spectacular views of the city.

The next day, we went to a traditional market. I was surprised when Giorgi started arguing with the shopkeeper, but it wasn't a real argument. He was just trying to get a better price. Actually, he was buying ingredients for one of the national dishes, khinkali – spicy beef and lamb in a thin dough. My friends wanted me to try it cooked at home instead of in a restaurant, and I wasn't disappointed. Thank you, Giorgi and Irina's mum!

Later that night, my last, we went to a performance of traditional Georgian dance. The women glided across the stage in long dresses while the men leaped around. Wow! I had a fantastic time, but I only saw a little of what the country has to offer. I can't wait to go back and see more of this amazing country.

Suzy_Style: Here in France, it's our national day today – Bastille Day! So, many people are wearing traditional French clothes like the beret and the Breton shirt. A beret is a soft, flat hat while a Breton shirt is a long-sleeved shirt with blue and white stripes. Sailors in the French Navy have worn Breton shirts 1) 1858, and they also became a fashion item in the early 20th century. What are some traditional clothes in your country?

14/07

It_Suits_Steve: Here in Ireland, one of our traditional clothes is the Aran jumper. It comes from the Aran Islands off the west coast, 2) fishermen often wear them. Irish people make them from sheep wool, so they are usually white, and heavy and warm. Also, because we make them from unwashed wool, they have natural oils, which make them waterproof! That's really important here in rainy Ireland!

14:29

14/07

Linda_90: We've got 3) of traditional clothes in Austria, but the traditional outfit for women is the dirndl. People wear it in Germany and Switzerland, too. The dirndl includes a long, wide, colourful skirt, an apron, a blouse with puffy sleeves, and a bodice – which is like a waistcoat that you tie together. Some people in the countryside still wear them daily, but in the cities you usually only see them at tourist attractions.

09:18

Diego_MexicoCity: I'm from Mexico, and the national piece of clothing here is the poncho. They're also popular in other countries in Central and South America, like Ecuador and Bolivia, and people have been wearing 4) since ancient times. The poncho is very simple – it's basically a blanket with a hole to put your head through, and you wear it over your other clothes to 5) warm. Some modern ponchos have hoods, too, but I prefer wearing the real thing.
